Crimson Horizon

In the hollow of a shattered vow,
I wore the thorns but broke the bough.
Hunted dreams through poisoned skies,
Fed my fears a thousand lies.

Your hands were clean, your words were gold,
Still I clutched the cold I chose to hold.
Blinded by the scars I'd crave,
You stayed the soul I could not save.

Tears like rivers carved the stone,
But love remained where fear had grown.

Now I rise where shadows fall,
Above the wreckage of it all.
Your light was there, I was too blind,
Lost in the prisons of my mind.
But crimson bleeds into the dawn,
And every ghost I fed is gone.
I crawl from sorrow's crooked seam,
To breathe again inside your dream.

I cursed the morning and the moon,
Built my grave a day too soon.
Searched for crimes you never wove,
Broke my own heart to prove my love.

Still you whispered through the storm,
Still you kept my demons warm.
I chased a war that never bled,
While you stitched wings across my head.

Tears like rivers carved the stone,
But love remained where fear had grown.

Now I rise where shadows fall,
Above the wreckage of it all.
Your light was there, I was too blind,
Lost in the prisons of my mind.
But crimson bleeds into the dawn,
And every ghost I fed is gone.
I crawl from sorrow's crooked seam,
To breathe again inside your dream.

You were the prayer I drowned in cries…
You were the mercy behind my eyes…
You never broke…
I broke for you.

Now I rise where shadows fall,
(Where shadows fall, I rise, I rise…)
Above the wreckage of it all.
(Above it all, above it all…)
Your light was there, I was too blind,
Lost in the prisons of my mind.
But crimson bleeds into the dawn,
And every ghost I fed is gone.
I crawl from sorrow's crooked seam,
To breathe again inside your dream.

Inside your dream…
Inside your dream…

HARUKEL